Mental health of perinatal women

Marjan Khajepur

Abstract

Pregnancy and childbirth are major stressors for some women. They can be followed by deterioration in mental health status and cause mental illnesses during perinatal period. Undetected and untreated perinatal mental illnesses can have negative unexpected impacts on parenting skills of the women and children's development. Mentally ill mothers may not effectively attend their children's needs in a timely manner and may experience an unfavourable mother-child attachment affecting the child's language, social, emotional and cognitive development. The rate of pregnancy and postnatal health complications and interventions is higher among mentally ill women with some certain risk factors. The mentally ill mothers along
